

A Story About An Emperor, A Tax Collector, A Government Department Head, And The US President

Once upon a time, there existed a very humble, yet poor Chinese emperor. The Imperial family had to flee to a very far away land to avoid being captured and killed by foreigners who conquered their homeland. Three generations, father, son, and grandson, lived abroad, as did the king of Afghanistan.

Later, after the king and his son died, their grandson became very political. The grandson's mother was a woman very similar to Jackie Kennedy, always trying to do good and helping the community in spite of having little or no money. Their whole family was this way, giving to others unselfishly and even giving when they had nothing for themselves or for their children.

The grandson negotiated, successfully, Saddam's withdrawal, but people high up in the Bush administration were jealous, envious, and sought to undermine the grandson by negating his efforts towards world peace and ignored his negotiation work between President Bush and President Hussein.

With the Qing Dynasty still present on the world's scene and building power for their eventual return to rulership over the Chinese mainland and the grandson's law enforcement work as a government whistleblower, this man requested recognition from President Bush, Clinton, Bush Junior, and Obama.

President Bush Senior said that he was willing to give serious consideration to this request and Obama refused to listen to this man's plight though he was obligated to act by law.

A tax collector, one or two, threatened to seize this man's property and intangible assets (royal symbols, etc) and said, "I don't believe that you are Emperor". 06-10-2010, telephone call about 2 PM HST. The Department head wanted to protect an illegal President and chose a crooked firm to deal with this man, severely, seizing all of his assets and blackening his community name forever in Hawaii's State and federal law courts. Essentially destroying this man and thereby negating him, disallowing his efforts of bring God to China, which was what he wanted to do, as commanded by Christ in Matthew 28:19,20.

Hiding the fact that he was born in Kenya and not Hawaii.

So, the tax collector held, thereby, a gun to this man's head and said "I am going to blow your head off!" I am permitting you one last request and wish. Say the right thing and I may or may not blow your head off. What is your last wish or request? And are you going to cooperate and not reveal that Obama was born in Kenya?

The man, China's legal and legitimate emperor and head of state replied, "I am an honest and upright man. Truthful unto God and I will not and I do not tell lies. I try to, also, consider human frailties and I exercise mercy, as does the almighty God, where mercy should be exercised. If any man gave me one wish before executing me, my one wish would not be for my own life, but for the lives of others. Please be thoughtful, honorable, and considerate of who I am and of my one wish. It is to take a Christian mission back to China to save China's 1.3 billion people from God's final wrath as we are in the last days, according to the Holy Bible. This is my main essence as a good, honorable, and upright man."

The tax collector who acted with the specific authority given to him from the crooked and evil US Department head, then, said, "Too bad!" and blew the man's head off as a way to get back at people who didn't promptly pay their debts. It serves as a lesson to others. Pay your government obligations even if you have to cheat and steal, or rob your aged and elderly grandmother as government obligations and the tax collector's salary comes first. You on the other hand are meaningless to high-level government officials like the President and department heads.

And this is how the story ends. The End.
